Sympathy versus Empathy – We hear a lot about how it's better to use empathy rather than sympathy. Especially when we are supporting another who is struggling or experiencing hard times. But what is the difference between sympathy and empathy?

Empathy is to have the ability to understand and share the feelings of another person. Sympathy is feeling sorrow or pity for another person or to agree or respond in support of a point of view. To me sympathy is a personal feeling that does not need to be shared with the person you are supporting. Empathy is an ability to connect with a similar feeling to the other and is shared with the person you are supporting.

Sympathy fuels disconnection. How? With sympathy we may say 'hey don't worry you will get over this' - not helpful. Sympathy when verbalised may create an uneven power dynamic and can lead to the other withdrawing. Further isolating themselves and not speaking out because to them your comment means you don't understand or have no idea.' Don't worry you'll get over this', or worse 'It's time to move on now eh'.

Empathy = Connection. With Empathy we walk in the other's shoes, we recognise the perspective of the other person. Using Empathy is a choice. I've stopped paused and will ensure I support rather than give a judgement. Empathy may make us vulnerable, because when we connect to the other it can bring up a similar feeling from our own past. With empathy it is OK and more powerful to admit when we don't know how to help. 'I don't know what to say right now I'm just glad you have told me'.

Empathy - I'm here with you, I'm here to support you and walk beside you. Empathy can just be sitting with the other and just being there for them, listening without the need to comment unless asked.

Sympathy is a response which rarely makes something better, but it does have its place. Sympathy to me should be viewed as a personal thought, something which pops into our mind, is real, but does not have to be verbalised.

Sympathy as with all emotions the resulting feelings are important. Even the so-called negative emotions are there to prepare us. Be curious pause, step back and analyse why you have this feeling. Your brain is trying to help you. It is never a good idea to say, "I know how you feel", because you don't. (sympathy) But you may think this and be aware of the similarities which enables you to be empathic.

Thoughts generated from strong feelings can become our reality. It is very important to listen to your feelings both mentally and physically. That gut feeling that something is not OK. As the expert on yourself listen to yourself and be that good strong example to others, that it's OK to not be OK, break your silence and seek help.

LABOR SUPER TAX BACKFLIP A HUMILIATING ADMISSION OF FAILURE

14 October 2025

Jim Chalmers has been forced into a humiliating backflip on his proposal to tax super unrealised gains, as his Prime Minister jetted off overseas leaving him holding the bag.

This is a humiliating moment for the Treasurer who spent two years defending the indefensible - a policy so unfair it united people from all walks of life.

This is a victory for the Coalition of Commonsense over a tax hungry Labor Government that simply cannot stop its spending spree.

The Treasurer has spent years assuring Australians that there was no other way than to tax unrealised gains without indexation, but he has finally been forced to admit that he was wrong.

Taxing theoretical profits was always a reckless idea that would have taken from Australians' life savings to feed a rapidly deteriorating budget bottom line.

Now the Treasurer is left with a $4.2 billion dollar budget black hole over the forward estimates and is no doubt preparing new taxes on everyday Australians to fill it.

After two years of chaos and spin, Labor has cobbled together a new model with multiple thresholds and other moving parts. The fine print will no doubt contain more unintended consequences for hardworking Australians.

No amount of spin from the Treasurer hides the fact that this is a full knock down rebuild of an utterly failed policy. Australians deserve stability and predictability in superannuation, not constant changes driven by a government in desperate search of higher taxes.

Federal Member for Durack, Melissa Price, said the decision will come as a relief to hardworking Australians across regional WA who simply want certainty when it comes to their retirement savings.

"People across Durack tell me they are already struggling with the rising cost of living, and the last thing they needed was Labor coming after their super," Ms Price said.

"This backflip is proof that everyday Australians - including small business owners, farmers and retirees right across regional WA - can make their voices heard. They knew this policy was unfair and unworkable from the start."

"Labor has shown once again that it cannot be trusted to manage the economy or protect Australians' savings. Regional Australians deserve a government that respects their hard work and helps them plan for the future - not one that keeps moving the goalposts."

Spending under Labor is growing more than four times faster than the economy and has reached its highest level outside a recession since 1986. This highlights Labor's addiction to big government and why they can't be trusted to manage people's retirement savings or the economy.

The Coalition's principles remain clear: super should be about helping Australians build a nest egg, not a blank cheque for the government to fund its spending spree.

Tools for finding the right tradie

Whether you're planning some home improvements or just need a quick repair, finding the right tradesperson can make all the difference. Most tradies are hardworking, honest professionals who do great work. But every so often, Consumer Protection hears from people who've been left disappointed, out of pocket, or worse by the few who don't play by the rules.

But how to do you choose the right tradie for your job? Take the time to do a bit of homework as it will save you headaches later on. Get multiple written quotes to compare price and value, and it's best these are given in-person. There has been a rise in scammers impersonating real tradespeople on online 'find-a-trade' platforms, asking for photos of jobs and sending fake invoices to trick people into paying.

Nothing beats the power of word-of-mouth. Recommendations from neighbours, friends and family can go a long way toward finding someone reliable and trustworthy.

Don't be shy about asking for references or to see previous work. A good businessperson should never have a problem with this. If they do, that's a red flag.

When you're looking to hire an electrician, gas fitter, builder, painter or plumber it's important to check they're licensed on wa.gov.au ( <https://www.wa.gov.au/organisation/building-and-energy/building-and-energy-licence-and-registration-search>)

One of the most common complaints Consumer Protection receives is about tradies who demand large deposits upfront and then fail to start or complete the job. Paying too much before any work begins puts you at risk, especially if the tradesperson goes broke or disappears.

While there's nothing wrong with a tradie asking for deposit, it's best to only pay around 10 per cent. For larger jobs try to negotiate progress payments as stages of the work are completed. Doing these things will reduce your risk and give you greater bargaining power if something goes wrong.

It's worth noting, if your job involves home building works valued at more than $7,500, the law says you can only be asked to pay a deposit of 6.5 per cent or less before work begins.

Paying by credit card is another smart move, as it may allow you to get your money back through a chargeback if goods or services aren't delivered.

From time-to-time things legitimately do go wrong. If a tradie needs to cancel a job after taking a deposit without providing any goods or services, they are required to return that deposit in full. On the other hand, if they need to increase the quote after they've accepted a deposit you are allowed to back out of the agreement and also get your full deposit back.

Similarly, if part of the job is unsolicited (for example, a tradie is already at your house fixing a tap and then offers to replace your hot water system) the law gives you a 10-business-day cooling-off period. During this time, they can't start work or ask for payment, and you can change your mind without any penalty.

Sometimes delays are genuinely out of a business's control, such as bad weather, postal holdups or supply chain issues. In these cases, it's best to give the business the opportunity to offer a solution, like a refund or a replacement. The same applies if the job wasn't completed to the expected standard.

Remember most tradies do the right thing, but the Australian Consumer Law protects consumers from the ones who don't.

If you can't resolve issues with the tradie first, you can lodge a complaint with Consumer Protection via www.consumerprotection.wa.gov.au, email consumer@lgirs.wa.gov.au, or call 1300 30 40 54.

A SPECIAL MENTION

Thank You for Supporting Our Telethon Fundraiser!

A huge thank you to our wonderful staff, students, parents, members of the public, the local doctor's surgery, and Shire staff for your incredible support.

Last week, we held a free dress day to raise funds for Telethon. Although it was organised at short notice, our generous school community came together and raised an amazing $541.05!

For those unfamiliar, Telethon is a Western Australian charity that supports children and families facing serious illness, disability, or disadvantage. Funds raised go toward life-changing medical research, equipment, and support services including places like Ronald McDonald House, where families can stay while their child receives treatment far from home.

This cause is especially close to our hearts right now, as one of our very own students is currently staying at Ronald McDonald House while undergoing treatment for a medical condition.

Maria is a bright, brave, and resilient student who continues to inspire us all. The entire Three Springs community sends love, strength, and support to Maria and the Yaquet family during this challenging time.

Thank you again for your kindness and generosity. It truly makes a difference.
